

Values Statement

WE BELIEVE THAT:

- The protection of our public lands requires a large, diverse, inclusive, and committed coalition of supporters and advocates.
- Everyone should have access to the mental health, physical health, educational, spiritual, and cultural benefits that public lands offer.
- We should celebrate and balance the myriad ways that people can respectfully engage with, honor, and enjoy public lands.

WE COMMIT TO:

- A public lands system that honors the diverse culture, history, and experiences of our people.
- A public lands and conservation workforce that reflects the growing diversity of our nation.
- Abundant opportunities for people, including those from underrepresented communities, to experience nature and outdoor recreation through federal, state, and local public lands, parks, and open spaces.

Since its founding in 2016, the Next 100 Coalition has been working to improve diversity, equity, and inclusion policy and practices in public lands and conservation in partnership with federal and state land management agencies, nonprofits, and the outdoor industry.

Following its first annual Next 100 National Summit in May 2018, the Next 100 Coalition launched a "Values Statement" intended to be broadly adopted by state land management agencies and local governments, nonprofits, the outdoor industry, and the general public to create a more diverse and equitable public lands and conservation movement.

The Next 100 Coalition launched this "Values Statement" at Elevate Conservation: Outdoors for All. Learn more about the organizations behind the Elevate Conservation: Outdoors for All Event at www.elevateconservation.com.
